

DEPARTMENT OF LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES

Study Guidance at the Department of Languages and Literatures

The Department has five study advisors. We have divided the subjects and study programmes among us in order to become experts in different areas, but each one of us can still answer most general questions.

Sometimes You Want Very Concrete Answers:

When is the retake test? Does this course count towards a degree? How am I going to pass this test, which is a prerequisite for the next course? Which courses should I take? How can I retake a course module I failed the first time? Which courses might be a good idea to combine for a degree? I'd like to study abroad, what do I do? If you feel unsure about where to turn with your questions, we suggest that you start with us. If we can't help you, we can usually tell you who you should talk to.

Sometimes You Don't Know What to Ask

All contacts with us are of course centered around your thoughts and questions, and everything said is confidential. Schedule a meeting with us if you want to sit down and discuss your thoughts with a neutral and objective study advisor who will not try to push somebody else's 'great' ideas on you. Pondering over your studies, what courses to take and what to do with your degree can be difficult to do alone. Or maybe you are not sure you should continue your studies, or you feel you are falling behind and don't know what to do about it. Then come see us or send us an email so we can talk about your situation.

What Can You Expect from a Study Advisor?

As study advisors we want to hear what's on your mind, help you summarise what you have to say, ask you questions and challenge you to think in new ways and expand your perspectives.

We can listen to your thoughts about your studies and future career.

We can answer many of your study-related questions.

We can help you find the tools you need to make the decisions that are right for you and your situation.

Maybe we can give you new ideas that will suit your interests and dreams.

We look forward to seeing you!
